POST Negation of Nationality

Basic Weakness of Pakistan's Politics and Politicians

THE background of Pakistan's perverse, almost suicidal drive is confused and complex. At the time of partition from India, East Pakistan was one province whereas West Pakistan consisted of several — Sind, Khairpur, Bahawalpur, the Punjab, the North-West Frontier Province, Baluchistan, and some princely states. A majority of the people — about fifty five per cent — lived in the one province of East Pakistan.

This meant that there was a

It is the first time that a group of this kind from the Eastern Bloc has visited Israel for serious study purposes, and it is a major satisfaction to know that we have much of interest to show the visitors. They will see not only hospitals and climites and such public health.

This meant that there was a ticklish question of political representation, for if it were to be placed on a population basis among the province; among the province, as a Political weight than all the others combined. The West Pakistanis are reluctant—a mild word for it.—to submit to an eastern, Bengali majority. This had been a factor in the destruction in October, 1954, of the first Constituent Assembly. The Republicans have had to turn a deal with the Mos-lem League, which they had once set out to obliterate. A coalition of sorts has been rigged up.

Almost no one expects it to last long or to be able to solve Pakistan's urgent problems. The coalition has taken a somewhat ambiguous stand on preserving "One Unit," saying they would keep it until national elections.
